

Contributors to Volume 5, Number 3

Daniel Beer is Research Fellow in History at Downing College, Cambridge. He is completing his first monograph, "Curing the Body Social: Degeneration Theory, Moral Contagion, and the Medicalization of Politics in Revolutionary Russia, 1880-1930." His review article on the Russian Revolution and his historiographical review on Stalinism are forthcoming in The Historical Journal and The Journal of Contemporary History, respectively.

David Brandenberger, Assistant Professor of History at the University of Richmond, is on leave this year at the Davis Center for Russian and Eurasian Studies at Harvard University. He has written about the intersection of ideology and national consciousness in journals such as The Russian Review, Jahrbücher für Geschichte Osteuropas, and Voprosy istorii. His National Bolshevism: Stalinist Mass Culture and the Formation of Russian National Identity, 1931-1956 was published in 2002.

Virginia Martin is Associate Professor of History at the University of Alabama in Huntsville and co-editor of The Central Eurasian Studies Review (a publication of the Central Eurasian Studies Society.) She is currently researching the history of the Kazakh steppe in the first half of the 19th century, with a focus on the elite caste of Kazakh Chinggisids ("Sultans") and their changing status in nomadic culture under Russian rule.

Norman Naimark is Robert and Florence McDonnell Professor of East European Studies at Stanford University and Senior Fellow of the Stanford Institute for International Studies and the Hoover Institution. At present, he is working on a book entitled "Stalin and Europe, 1944-53," as well as on a series of essays on "Mass Killing." His most recent books include The Russians in Germany: A History of the Soviet Zone of Occupation, 1945-1949 (1995) and Fires of Hatred: Ethnic Cleansing in Twentieth-Century Europe (2001).

Ehren Park is a third-year degree candidate at the New York University School of Law. He majored in history at Yale University, with a concentration in Russian and East European history and politics. He is currently writing an article on labor racketeering for a law journal.

Susan Smith-Peter is Assistant Professor of History at the College of Staten Island/City University of New York, where her research focuses on civil society and regional identity in the 19th-century Russia. She recently edited an issue of Russian Studies in History (2003), entitled "The Russian Nobility and Local Society."

Willard Sunderland is Associate Professor in the Department of History at the University of Cincinnati. He recently published Taming the Wild Field: Colonization and Empire on the Russian Steppe (2004).