1. Publication and Authorship

REGION accepts only original contributions. Authors must disclose any financial or substantive conflict of interest and must acknowledge the work of others. Plagiarism, falsification, omitting significant material, and fraudulent data are not allowed. Authors must explicitly cite others' work and ideas in references (see REGION's Style Sheet and Submission Guidelines for proper references/citations). REGION cannot accept work that is under consideration by any other publication at the same time or that has been published elsewhere. If a portion is considered elsewhere, authors must indicate so. Authors must disclose if their submission has been published elsewhere, in its entirety or any portion of it, including if a substantially similar version was published in another language. Articles previously published in languages other than English may be considered by the editorial board if they believe that the work deserves additional dissemination in English (e.g., if it was originally published in a local journal and will reach a different community of readers via REGION as an international journal), comes from a less-commonly used language in the field, and supports REGION's mission of providing a platform for less frequently heard voices in REGION's field of study, and is referenced as such. In such cases the author should inform the editors of the status of the manuscript upon initial submission (e.g., translated without change; translated with minor revisions; translated with substantial revisions; etc.). Where portions of the content overlap with published or submitted content, authors should acknowledge and cite those sources. Moreover, authors should provide the editor with a copy of any other submitted manuscript that might contain overlapping or closely related content.

2. Author's Responsibilities

Authors are encouraged to participate in REGION's peer-review process. All listed authors of articles published in REGION must have contributed significantly to the specific research reflected in that article. By agreeing to publish in REGION, authors affirm that all data and research are authentic. All authors agree that, should it be brought to their or the editors' attention that errors that have been identified in their contribution, authors agree to the publication of corrections or retractions as necessary.

3. Peer review & Responsibility for REGION's reviewers

REGION has a double-blind peer-review process based on initial editor screening and double-blind refereeing by a minimum of two reviewers. Conversely, REGION's editors treat all submissions confidentially. Our journal will respond to your submission in a timely manner; usually, editors are able to report back to authors within four months. REGION's reviewers' judgments must be objective and must declare if there is a conflict of interest with the research or authors or research funding support. Articles must be treated confidentially. If reviewers are aware of relevant published work not cited here, they are expected to bring it to the attention of the authors.

4. Responsibility for Editors

REGION's editors have the authority to reject or accept a submission once they have a reasonable degree of certainty.

Editors must disclose any potential conflict of interest with respect to articles submitted to REGION. If errors are found in the publication, the editorial board will promote the correction or retraction. The editorial board will maintain the anonymity of the reviewers.

5. Publishing Ethics Issues

REGION's editorial operation (including the main editorial office as well as remote participants, such as the editorial board) as a whole is responsible for monitoring and enforcing adherence to the ethical principles outlined in this declaration. The editorial office will maintain records of submission and revision so as to ensure the historiographic record, e.g., in establishing precedence in publishing any proposal, interpretation, or data, etc. The editorial office will not permit business considerations to influence its editorial decisions. The editorial office will publish corrections, clarifications, retractions, and apologies as required, and will take all reasonable measures to guard REGION against possible plagiarism or fraudulent data.
