

Contents

Acknowledgments	x
Translator's Introduction	xi
Preface: N. N. Strakhov, "The Life and Works of N. Ia. Danilevskii" (1889)	xxvii
1. 1864 and 1854—In Place of an Introduction	1
A comparison of the two years. Europe's indifference to Denmark and sympathy for Turkey. The Holstein question. The Crimean War: the significance of the key to the Bethlehem temple. The Vienna Note: Europe's political course of action transferred to the sphere of personal relations. Public opinion of Europe. Why a measurement by different standards?
2. What Does Europe Have Against Russia?	16
Russia is not an aggressor state. What exactly is aggression and conquest? Finland. Baltic provinces. Western Krai. Poland. Bessarabia. Caucasus. Siberia. The nature of Russia's wars. Russia does not extinguish light and freedom. The Holy Alliance. The assassination of Kotzebue. Russia's liberalism has not reduced the hostility it faces. Europe's ignorance regarding Russia. Europe does not recognize us as one of its own.
3. Is Russia Europe?	44
What exactly is Europe? The artificiality of continental divisions. The historical-cultural meaning of "Europe." Russia does not belong to Europe. Russia's role, in Europe's opinion. Russia is an obstacle to the development of European civilization. The offering from the lowly for the most high: Marquis Poza. Superficial political patriotism: the Ultra-Russian party. Where is the reconciliation between national feeling and the demand for progress?
4. Is European Civilization the Universal Civilization?	58
West and East. Progress in the East: China. The death of a people. What exactly is a scientific system? A natural system. Its requirements. An appraisal of the generally accepted system in the study of world history. A new, natural grouping of historical phenomena: historical-cultural types. Their enumeration. Ethnographic material.

-
5. Cultural-Historical Types and Some Laws of Their Movement and Development 76
- Five laws of the development of types. The law of the relationship between languages and political independence. The law of the noninheritability of civilization. The influence of Greece on the East. The influence of Greece on Rome. The influence of Rome. The transplantation of civilization. The grafting of civilization. Fertilizer for the soil. The law of the diversity and strength of the constituent elements of a type. On the service of the individual person to his type. The impossibility of knowing how to serve humanity. The law of the brevity of the periods of civilization. Progress and its limits. The change from the ethnographic to the governmental state.*
6. How What Is National Relates to What Is Universally Human 95
- Our Westernizers' understanding of the universal and the national. The teaching of the Slavophiles. There cannot be a single or a higher realization of the idea of humanity. How the national is (mis-)taken for the universal. Genus and species. Interspecies and all-species. The Slavic type. The idea of Slavdom—the highest idea for all Slavs. Science is not a synonym for civilization. What is truth exactly? The subjective admixture. One-sidedness and multiple eras. The predilection for well-known subjects. Example: mathematics. The common pattern of development of each science. The development of astronomy. Five periods. The development of chemistry. Physics. Botany. Zoology. Mineralogy and geology. Linguistics. The period of artificial systems. The table of the great scholars. The peculiar direction of the German mind. Classifications of the sciences. The impossibility of a general theory of society.*
7. Is the West Decaying? 135
- How likely at the present time is the appearance of a new (Slavic) culture? What exactly is decay? At what stage of development are European societies? The peak of causal forces: the results come later. The examples of Greece, Rome, and India. Determining the current stage of the civilizations of Europe.*
8. The Difference in Mental Framework 144
- Retzius' division of human tribes. A conclusion from him. Violence—the characteristic of the Germanic-Roman type. Intolerance. The papacy. The division of the churches. Proselytism. The trade in negro slaves. The Opium War and the protection of Turkey. The absence of violence among the Slavs. The peculiarity of transformations in the life of the Russian people. The adoption of the Christian faith. The peasant emancipation. What aristocracy and democracy are to us. The classification of moral qualities.*
9. The Difference in Religious Beliefs 169
- Revelation. Four concepts of the Church. The Protestant concept. The mystical view of the Church. The Catholic concept. The groundlessness of the papists' pretensions. The inconsistency of Catholics. "A free church in a free state." Relations of Church and State; marriage. The Orthodox concept of the Church. The rationalism of Europe.*

10. The Difference in the Course of Historical Upbringing 188
- The definition of the state. The relationship between nationality and state. Unconscious tribes. Tribes dead to political life. One nationality—one state. The different forms of the state. Federation: united state, union of states, and political system. The origin of the state. Native-cultural strength drawn from the forest. Dependence as a condition for development of the state. Slavery. Tributary obligation. Feudalism. The burden of thought and the burden of conscience in medieval Europe. The internal contradiction in the life of contemporary Europe. France—the fullest expression of Europe. A sketch of French history. The fortuitous circumstances of England. The burden of the abstract state. The origin of nationality. Hundred-year periods. The character of the nineteenth century. The question of nationality and the Napoleons. The connection of nationality questions with the Slavic question. The special historical development of Russia. The calling of the Varangians. The Tatar invasion. The Time of Troubles. Serfdom.*
11. Europeanism: The Sickness of Russian Life 225
- The incomplete health of Russia. The necessity of the Petrine reforms. Peter’s relationship to Russia. Two sides of his activity. Europeanism and its three forms. The distortion of the form of our ways of life. The detriment for art and sculpture. For painting. For architecture. For industry. The division of the Russian people into two social strata. Its influence on non-Russians. The transplanting of foreign institutions. The Great Reforms. The legal profession. The liberation of the press. The effect of the press on the public. The true strength of the periodical press. The Times. Looking at Russian affairs through European lenses. Our “aristocrats” and “aristocratism.” The alliance of Vest’ with all aristocracy. Nihilism. Courting the favor of Europe. Disavowal of Pan-Slavism. The Monroe Doctrine. The wars of the time of Alexander I. The events of the Crimean War. The arrogance of Russia. The Polish issue.*
12. The Eastern Question 257
- The impotence of diplomacy. The historian Solov’ev’s opinion. There never was a struggle between Asia and Europe. The ancient Eastern Question. Macedonia. The inheritors of Rome—Germans; the inheritors of Byzantium—Slavdom. Synchronism as a sign of the reasonableness of [history’s] world-governance. The property of water. The synchronism of the printing press, the fall of Constantinople, and the discovery of America. The religious distinction. A new era of the Eastern question. Islam. Its idea in history. Europe’s relations with the Turks. The necessity of combining liberal and national politics. The significance of the emancipation of the serfs for the Eastern question. The gradual clarification of the Eastern Question.*
13. The Place of Austria in the Eastern Question 283
- A brief outline of the history of the formation of the Austrian state. Without Slavs and Russians, the culture and political development of Germany would have been impossible. The cancellation of the idea of the Austrian government. Metternich. Categories of statesmen: great statesmen, tragic, and tragicomic personalities. Methods of preserving Austria after Metternich: centralization, dualism, and federalism. The impossibility of Austria in all three forms. A thought about an*

	Austrian federation of Slavs. A thought about an Austro-Turkish federation. The idea of All-Slavdom.
14.	Tsargrad	316
	The centrality of Constantinople's location. Its four names and four historical epochs. The right to Constantinople. What exactly is a historical right? Constantinople is a res nullius. To whom is the control of Constantinople all important? 1) The Achilles' heel of Russia. 2) The size of Russia. 3) The necessity of a navy, but a Black Sea navy, for Russia. 4) The expansion of Russia's moral influence from the control of Constantinople. Tsargrad must be the capital not of Russia, but of an All-Slavic union. A Slavic federation with Russia at the head, as a resolution of the Eastern question. The members of the federation must be large. Its goal is not the absorption of the Slavs by Russia. The composition of an All-Slavic union, and an enumeration of its members. The Polish question. The best resolution is by means of an All-Slavic federation.
15.	The All-Slavic Union	342
	Russia cannot be a member of the European political system. Interference never brought it any benefit. Russia must be a counterbalance to Europe. Two fates awaiting Russia. The significance of a union for the rest of its members. For Greece. For Bulgaria. What exactly is the Russian intelligentsia. For Serbia. For Czechia. For Romania. For Poland and Hungary. Russia's supposed lust for power. Three categories of subjects. The fear of world domination. The necessity of a Slavic union for humanity. The history of Europe in relation to other peoples. The system of political equilibrium. The main occasions of its disruption and preservation. An obstacle to Europe's world domination. The disastrous result of an all-human civilization. The conditions and consequences of an All-Slavic federation. The promotion of Russian as an All-Slavic language. The necessity of a struggle with Europe.
16.	The Struggle	373
	The law of preserving a store of historical strength. The rule for Russian politics. Russia has no interest in a system of equilibrium. Equilibrium is harmful for Russia, but its disruption is advantageous. Russia's relations with the main representatives of European power. With England. With France. With Prussia. The internal sources of Russia's strength. Disciplined enthusiasm. An appraisal of the wars Russia waged with Europe. The sympathy of the Slavs. The peasant allotment.
17.	The Slavic Historical-Cultural Type—In Place of a Conclusion	403
	Four categories of cultural activity. Primary cultures. The single-foundation historical-cultural types. The European type. The threefold anarchy of Europe. The properties and prospects of the Slavic world. The character of Slavic religiosity. The capacity for statehood. The special nature of Russian political activity—the absence of possessions and colonies. Is the Russian people capable of freedom? Russian uprisings. Russia's social and economic structure. The obshchina and socialism. Culture in the strict sense of the word. Consuming its strength in the construction of government. The contrast between America and Russia. Indications of scientific and artistic capability. Dead Souls. Boris Godunov. War and Peace. Ivanov's painting. Pimenov's Transfiguration. Mickiewicz. Slavdom — the quadruple-foundation historical-cultural type. Two streams of world history.

Appendix	439
Index	441